Giving As Thanks

November is that time of year when we traditionally give thanks for all we have been given. But this year, instead of simply saying thanks, why not make Thanksgiving a time of truly giving - perhaps by contributing to a non-profit of your choice, by volunteering, or by using the opportunity to help others while doing something you enjoy.

This past year, my husband and daughter chose to climb Mt. Kilimanjaro, the highest mountain in Africa. For them, the joy of pursuing their love of mountain climbing was magnified by knowing that they were doing the climb with the goal of raising $5,000 for pancreatic cancer research.

I am happy to report that my climbers scaled the 19,341-foot summit and returned safe and sound. They created life-long memories during their father-daughter time together and also honored Peter's mother.

Ancient Chinese philosophy tells us that giving brings good karma. Giving and doing for others has the power to lift our spirits while truly impacting the lives of others-whether that be in our own communities or somewhere else on the globe. If you are looking for inspiration on ways that you can engage in effective altruism, check out givewell.org.

Then keep the good vibrations rolling by contacting me to learn more about how you can continue to create good karma, health and prosperity through the practice of Feng Shui in your life.

Don't miss the two wonderful events coming up over the next months:
